A month-to-month however will afford the flexibility to both parties should they wish to terminate the situation. Of course, certain considerations must be made (in this case, a notice of termination must be issued from the departing party to the other). This requirement is set as an effort to safeguard extraneous negative repercussions that may result from the destruction of the arrangement.

Unlike a traditional 12 month agreement, the tenant will be allowed to continue to rent the property, month to month, as long as the monthly rental payments are on time and continued care to the property is taken as long as the tenant is renting. If either the landlord or tenant would wish to end the agreement, they may do so by providing written notice to vacate the property, 30 days in advance. This will keep either party in compliance with this aspect of the agreement.
